derivation of temporal properties are provided by a deductive proof system. Chapter 4 explores the utility of temporal logic as a language for specifying properties of reactive programs. Program properties are classified into a hierarchy of classes, based on their expression in temporal logic. The most important

The Temporal Logic of Reactive and Concurrent Systems ...

Temporal logic is a formal tool/language which yields excellent results in specifying reactive systems. This volume, the first of two, subtitled Specification, has a self-contained introduction to temporal logic and, more important, an introduction to the computational model for reactive programs, developed by Zohar Manna and Amir Pnueli of Stanford University and the Weizmann Institute of Science, Israel, respectively.
